Advertising Hints & Tip

Thinking about investing in advertising in our magazines? You'll want to get the best return on this part of your marketing.

Establish your target

Who is your customer? Once you have this information, your artwork can be designed with them in mind. Your customer's demographics and needs are key to how you represent your business in our magazines.

What do you want from your advert?

The answer to this might be obvious, as ultimately we all want more customers and more revenue, but the question is - how is advertising with us going to drive this forward? Do you want a stronger brand awareness? Are you promoting a particular event, milestone or service? Or do you have a call to action? Once you understand which of these is your reason for advertising, this can help you monitor your responses better.

Monitor your responses

This is so important because it is so vital to know if your advert is working. All you need to do is ask. However ASK the right questions - customers are busy people! There is a very good chance they have seen you in the magazines and then checked out your business online, so the last place they saw you was on the internet when in fact they found you in the magazines.

A good question is 'Have you seen my business in a local magazine?'

It is also good practise to ask if there was something about the advert which drew them to your business, then you know which part of your message works best for your potential audience.

Build a marketing mix

To stand out you need to be seen in a very crowded market. Customers are 152% more likely to make contact if they see you in print, and your brand can build more trust if they see you regularly. Therefore having a strong presence on social media and a good-quality website will reinforce your message and build confidence in your business or service.
